Re: The Main Street Agenda Top Takeaways - Let's Get Something Done

Get Something Done

The American people want Washington, D.C. to stop bickering and get something done. As they face the challenges that come with the rising cost of gas and groceries, people have grown frustrated and unimpressed with America's leadership.

In swing districts...

72% say our country is headed in the wrong direction.

63% disapprove of Joe Biden's job performance.

79% disapprove of Congress.

85% say America's standing and reputation in the world is getting weaker.

Republican Main Street Partnership (RMSP) has put together an agenda with practical policy platforms to tackle the immediate problems American families are seeing each day. A top takeaway - people want to see their representatives Get Something Done.

The Agenda

To have any hope of getting something done, RMSP gathered ideas and input from its members to create a commonsense agenda that can find common ground. To accomplish our goal, the ideas we considered had to be conservative, mainstream, and easily find common ground across the aisle.

1. Energy Independence
2. Getting Back to Work
3. Fixing the Supply Chain
4. Keeping our Families Safe
5. Standing for Freedom on the Global Stage

Tested

We conducted a survey of registered voters across four swing congressional districts (CA-22, NE-02, OR-05, PA-17), testing solutions in RMSP's Let's Get Something Done Agenda. The responses were collected July 12-18th via a text-to-web online platform. The survey is weighted by age, educational attainment, ethnicity, gender, and congressional district and carries a margin of error $\pm 3.75\%$.

Conclusions

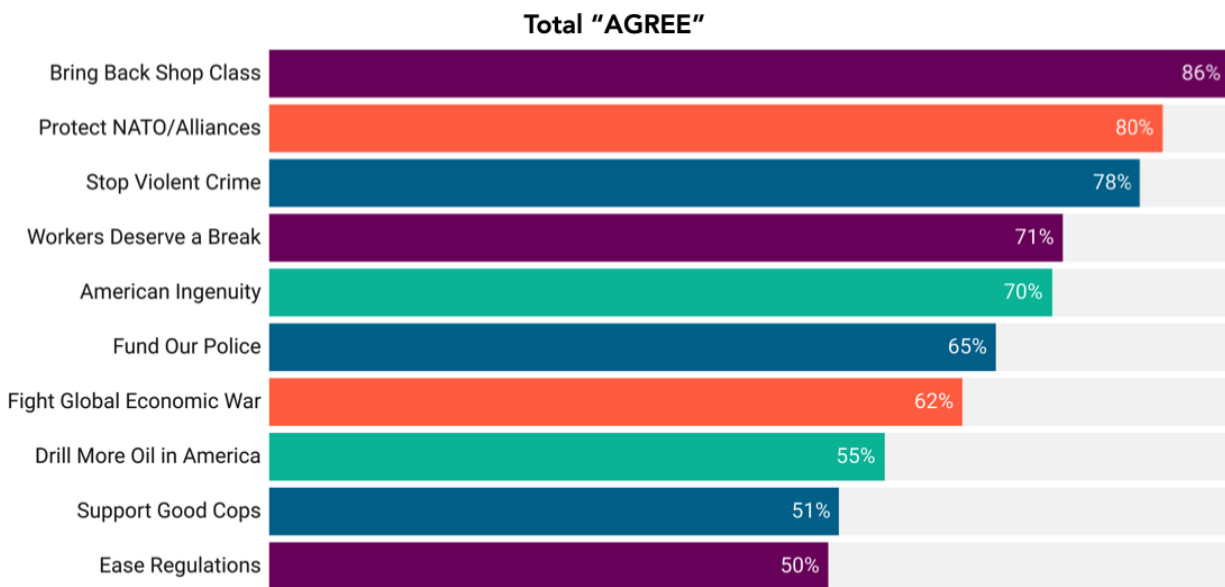

These are the policies and framework that Republicans should own - they are solutions Americans support, that draw a stark contrast to the extremist Democrat agenda.

We need to show the American people that Republicans are solutions-driven hard workers who are ready to fix this mess. These proven, popular ideas resonate across the country across a broad political spectrum.

Key Findings

Main Street rewards commonsense conservative values.

The Let's Get Something Done Agenda enjoys broad support across the political spectrum. Every single Main Street Agenda statement tested had at least majority support.

The Main Street agenda is popular AND conservative. The agenda scores as mainstream, conservative, and is persuasive even to fence-sitting persuadable subgroups like independents, moderates, suburbanites, and college-educated voters.

Example:

"To keep violent criminals out of our neighborhoods, Prosecutors and District Attorneys can't be allowed to let murderers, rapists, and kidnapers off easy. They must be held accountable through strict guidelines."
